REMOVAL OF THE NATIONAL CAPITAL TO ST. LOUIS.

It will be recollected that Gen. Logan. last winter, made a motion in Congress. looking to the removal of the National Capital to some central point, and that this motion was laid on the table by a small majority, doubtless because of the lack of agreement among members as to where that point should be. Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis and Memphis each looked upon the prize as their own, and the consequences were that the sub-ject of "removal" became secondary to that of "relocation," and the whole mat-ter was incontinently tabled by a small majority. Profiting by this experience, we now find the Chicago Tribune calling upon the various sections of the great Mississippi Valley to throw aside sectional rivalry and petty-jealousies, and, with true, far-seeing sagacity unite upon the most fitting location, and secure the change, assuring them that unless such a policy obtains, they will waste their energies, and again delay or defeat the result by contending among themselves for the prize. The Tribune advises all to be content with the obvious advantage of removing the National Capital to the Mississippi Valley, and enter upon the movement with such harmony as will ensure its success. In accordance with this view, the Tribune gracefully withdraws Chicago from the contest, and with great ingenuousness pronounces in favor of Chicago's more mmediate commercial rival, St. Louis.

"If it is desirable, as we believe, that the capital shall not again be a mere village dependent on Government pap for the daily bread of its residents, from President down to porter and fiddler, the choice lies between four cities. It is an objection to Cincinnati that the center of population has already reached or passed it, and like Washington, it will be less central with each succeeding year. Moreover, neither the site of the city itself, nor that of its suburbs, is worthy of selection for a National Capital. The broken hills around Cincinnati are remantic and beautiful for isolated country residences, but ill-adapted to the laying out of magnificent public squares and the erection of government edifices which sholl be masterpieces of national architecture. Chicago rests content with her position as the commercial metropolis of the central basin drained by the lakes, the Mississippi and its tributaries. Her commercial and business interests would be injured by coming under the exclusive legislation of Congress (as would be required by the constitution if the seat of government were brought here) in a degree that not even the accession of the capital, if she could obtain it, would outweigh. Chicago prefers the wisdom of her local Solons, her Mayor and Common Council, and her rights of municipal self-government to the kind of legislation which would be done for her by honorable members from Florida, Rhode Island, Alaska and Texas. The severity of our winters and thought of her competition. Each of these objections becomes an argument in favor of St. Louis. She is, and will always remain, a great commercial city, leading manufacturing center. Official sojourners and visitors there would not their daily bread. The location is cenpassed in beauty of scenery or attractions of climate, and, munty, the immediate site for the location of the public edifices afforded by the commanding plateau around the pleasant city of St. Louis, would be fully equal to that at Washington, and unsurpassed at any other point in the country. Instead of the Potomac, the capital would overlook the Mississippi, so appropriately ex-pressive of the broader tide, the deeper flow, the longer current, and the resistless force our national development has attained since that early day when the tabernacle of the government was set up amidst the solitudes of the Poto-

If the people of the Mississippi Valley will unite on this point, it can speed-ily be accomplished. The expense would be comparatively trifling. The site, should, of course, be given free of cost by St. Louis. The present public buildings could be taken down at Washington, stone by stone, laden on governernment or other vessels, brought to St. Louis and erected again, precisely as they now stand, at a very modeate outlay. This should be done before the number of public buildings is increased; and before the several States have erect-
